Here in Virginia, 3,753 people died last year from respiratory diseases. Half a million Americans have serious and disabling chronic respiratory dis eases. Many more of our citizens suffer from the acute infections that lead to pneumonia. In 1963 there were cases of 21 Virginia persons taken from their homes and compiled in Vital Statistics by the Department of H

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Harry W. Jarrell, who passed away December 11, 1962.

Two years ago you left us
And took our hearts along.
And made a weaken family
Of one that felt so strong
It's hard to believe, even now,
That you are really gone.
It's so lonely here without you,
And how we missed you so.
Our thoughts of you will be with
No matter where we go.
God gave us strength to face it,
And courage to bear the blow
And what it means to lose you,
No one will ever know
God has you in his hands we
Carry you in our hearts
To those who have a husband,
Treat him with tender care,
For you will never know his value
Until you see his vacant chair
Sadly missed by wife and children.

Farm Questions

(Editor's note: Here are some frequently asked questions on care of ornamental plants. Answers are by staff members at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.)

Q — When should spring blooming shrubs like forsythia, flowering quince, and weigela be pruned

A — Spring blooming shrubs, if they need to be controlled in size, should be pruned after the flowers fade. If planted where it is not necessary to control the height, pruning can be done any time of the year by removing some of the older canes close to the ground.

Q — Is it beneficial to remove faded flowers of lilac and rhododendron?

A — Removal of faded flowers before seeds are formed is beneficial.

Order Your Pine Seedlings Now

The Virginia Division of Forestry's tree planting program for the 1964-65 season is now here and the Farmville District is in the process of taking orders for thousands of pine seedlings throughout the ten-county district area, including Appomattox County.

Two nurseries are operated by the Division of Forestry for growing seedlings and distributing them to landowners at the cost of producing the trees. The purpose behind the planting program is to reforest idle and cutover areas in the State. The object of the reforestation program is to maintain adequate growth of good quality trees for the future needs of wood - producing industries.

Loblolly pine seedlings are the main kind of seedlings distributed because these trees grow much faster during early years than other trees. These pine trees are also very adaptable to most of the soils in the Piedmont area. Loblolly pine has proved to be very acceptable tree species for Appomattox County.

On a recent forestry tour of the various projects in Appomattox County, Jim Smith, County Agent, R. B. Parrish, Forester for Continental Can Company, and Carroll Mays, Forester with West Virginia Pulp and Paper Company, and Ed Gills, of VPI Extension, along with the Division of Forestry personnel observed many of the fine tree planting projects being undertaken in this county. Landowners who are interested in obtaining information about tree planting programs should contact Dave Smith, the Chief Forest Warden of Appomattox County, or drop a card to the Division of Forestry, Box 386, Farmville, Virginia

Financial assistance is available to landowners who do tree planting work through the Agricultural Conservation Program. Using money provided by the ACP program makes it very difficult for anyone to truthfully say they cannot afford to plant trees on their unproductive land.

There is a special ACP provemembers which provides financial assistance to these boys and girls who are interested in undertaking a forestry project. This does not interfere with their parents' normal ACP assistance for other farm practices. Appomattox County is one of the two counties where this special program is being tried. This is a real opportunity for young folks to plant trees.

The West Virginia Pulp and Paper Company is again this year matching one-half the cost of pine seedlings up to orders of twenty-five thousand trees. Orders are now being taken at the Caskie Woodyard at Bent Creek near Gladstone.
